

Lynn Kuntsman

Lynn is a member of the Jackson County Master Gardener Association. She has lived in the Rogue Valley since 1986. She holds a Bachelor's degree in Wildlife Management and a Master's degree in Science Education. A retired middle school science and special education teacher, Lynn's students at Ashland Middle School established the butterfly garden there. Her first project, upon retiring and moving from Ashland to Medford was to mulch out all the lawns on her property. Lynn's entire front yard in Medford is now given over to wildlife, planted with edible trees and shrubs, and pollinator plants. Her backyard is planted in fruit trees, berries and vegetables (for humans). She is an enthusiastic advocate of gardens planted with wildlife, pollinators and butterflies in mind. Her hobbies, aside from gardening, include cooking, food preservation, travel, and crochet, playing with her grandson, and singing in her band, Ur Mom.

Program Description

Gardening for Butterflies, Birds and Bees

Lynn will provide information about how to plan and grow gardens to attract butterflies, honey and native bees, birds and other pollinators. She'll also provide information about the Monarch Watch Program and the Wildlife Habitat Program. Participants will learn about the process for becoming a Certified Monarch Way Station and a Certified Wildlife Habitat. This class is suitable for home gardeners and educators.
